MAN AND THE GLACIAL FLOOD

Abbey Lodge, Regent's Park, Jan. 11, 1863.

LYON ARMS.}

Your letter of the 12th of January, on "The History of the Apocrypha," you may be inclined to allow me briefly to refer to a tradition recorded in the "Zeddavatsum," which may possibly refer to the glacial period. I quote:

"Thus spake Ahura-mazda (the wise spirit) to the holy Zarathustra. I created a place, a creation of charm, where no possibility (to approach) was anywhere created. For I did not create a place, a creation of charm... the entire world ended with bodies which would have gone to Aryan Veda, the first and the best of the three..."

These and other places are mentioned in regular order from east to west, the first may have been the halting places of the Aryan emigrants from the shores of the Caspian Sea, the north-west of the Caspian Sea.

Diluvial views of man before the glacial period may have been possible.
